

Dispute Resolution

Dispute resolution is essentially strategic risk management. Assess, quantify, manage and resolve the risk is the approach we generally adopt. And resolution must align with the client's objectives.

This approach applies whether you are bringing or defending multiple similar claims or involved in a single issue dispute. It applies if you are challenging third party use of your IP, are defending a negligence claim or investigating a fraud.

Resolution does not of course mean that you will fully achieve your objectives; rather it means that you make informed choices which seek to optimise the chances of positive outcomes and avoid really poor outcomes.

Our team brings a commercial perspective and versatile approach to dispute resolution. The commerciality ensures that overall business objectives are at the core of thinking so that commercial or reputational ramifications beyond an apparently narrow issue are considered. Versatility means that we consider different approaches to disputes. In collaboration with our clients, we seek to devise the best tactics for the case in hand, be that mediation, senior business to business discussions, messaging through various channels or running the case.

We are routinely involved in complex, high profile commercial court litigation so our skills and knowledge are attuned to the judicial trends of the moment. We are frequently retained by international clients on multi-jurisdictional disputes which involve providing strategic guidance driven by the different systems of rules and practices worldwide.

We represent domestic and multinational companies across a range of sectors including financial services, energy, health, technology, insurance, construction and the public sector.

Our specialist practice groups have niche expertise in insolvency, banking, intellectual property, competition law, public administrative law, aviation law, fraud, investigations and child care law.
